

Brett Fleishman

Brett Fleishman is the Senior Global Analyst for 350.org, an international organization building a global climate movement engaged in policy, economics, and civil society. From 2007 to 2012, Brett taught Development Economics and Environmental Impact for a college accredited program in Bolivia and Peru. Brett then worked for author/economist Jeremy Rifkin at The Foundation for Economic Trends, based in DC, lobbying and providing research on climate change. Brett is now focused on the movement to divest from fossil fuels and reinvestment in climate solutions. Brett holds a Master of Science in Development Economics from The New School in New York City.